the Canadian authorities by a neutral country.

Search is still being continued by the Canadian authorities on the other side of the river for the man whom Van Horn claims was his accomplice. The German asserts that the man was an Irishman, and that he met him on the bridge by appointment. He stated that his accomplice was unknown by him, and that identification was made by means of a password.

Only the snow and extreme cold weather, Van Horn declared, prevented him from completely demolishing the bridge at the point where the explosion occurred.
